

HP Education Services Course Description

Race-to-Results Project Management Office (PMO) Simulation (HF397)

Some efforts require hundreds, even thousands, of separate projects. If your world involves managing multiple ongoing inter-dependent projects, whether hundreds or a handful, you need program management skills and best practices to bring your organization outstanding results. With this simulation, experience and learn how an emphasis on coordinating and prioritizing resources across projects, departments, and entities can ensure that resources and results are managed from a global focus.

Audience

- This course is intended for people whose work involves managing multiple ongoing inter-dependent projects and who want to experience breakthroughs in understanding and applying program management best practices through experiential learning. It is especially suited for management-level decision-makers and PMO members

Prerequisites

- Organizational responsibility for managing multiple inter-dependent projects
- Significant experience and formal training in project management

Course Objective

Learn how to:

- Recognize the requirements and advantages of program management best practices
